Practice trends we're seeing

Why is prevention-led dentistry shaping modern Australian practice?

Oral diseases remain one of the most common health conditions globally, affecting an estimated 3.5 billion people worldwide, highlighting the need for effective preventive care.

Australian research highlights prevention as a key priority in improving oral health outcomes, with a strong focus on reducing the burden of dental caries through early intervention.

- Fluoride varnish has been shown to reduce caries by ~24–36% in Australian populations
- Up to 76% reduction in advanced decay when combined with fissure sealants in Australian community studies
